The Weatherly Spirit...

Perhaps Children the Answer to Peace?

I read this quote from the southern writer, farmer, essayist, poet, and professor of English Wendell Berry. I heard him speak years ago, and I have always found his writings to be challenging. This was published in an article entitled "A Citizen's Response to the National Security Strategy of the United States." It is about radical forgiveness.

It is useless to try to adjudicate a longstanding animosity by asking who started it or who is the most wrong. The only sufficient answer is to give up the animosity and try forgiveness, to try to love our enemies and to talk to them and (if we pray) to pray for them. If we can't do any of that, then we must begin again by trying to imagine our enemies' children who, like our children, are in mortal danger because of enmity that they did not cause.

Where do longstanding animosities end? They end either with destruction and death or forgiveness. Cultures pass on to their children and grandchildren hatreds the children do not rightly own. They were not personally wronged, but they were taught to hate anyway. At some point the animosity must and will end. The question sane people must ask is, how will it end? Will it end with the continued destruction of people who hold no direct stake in the animosity, or will it end with forgiveness?

Of course, Berry's proposal will work only if all parties agree to "imagine our enemies' children" and forgive. One party cannot hold onto the animosity and then annihilate the unsuspecting, defenseless enemy.

Is Wendell Berry's proposal really possible? Is it possible that our children are the answer to the question of peace? I doubt we will ever know.

Peace anyway,
David

Dear Friends,

For more than thirty years you have truly been the family of God to us, sharing our joys and our sorrows, and continuing even after we moved from Huntsville. We thank you so much for your prayers and for the many expressions of love and caring that we have received since the recent death of our son, Mitch. They have given us comfort and strength in the midst of profound loss.

With love and gratitude,
Mickey and Pat Hallum

Handy's Happenings  When the Rocks Cry Out

*If we keep our voices silent, all creation will rise and shout,
If we fail to praise You, Father, then will the very rocks cry out!*

The entire emotional range of Lent culminates in Palm Sunday. Here, Jesus had sent two of His disciples ahead to Bethany to bring him a colt. When they returned with the colt the scriptures read “the disciples cast their garments upon the colt, and they set Jesus on the colt. And as He went, they spread their clothes along the way.” As they drew closer to the Mount of Olives, the group became a parade singing “Blessed is He who comes in the name of the Lord!” The parade drew people into joining this joyful parade. As they moved closer to Jerusalem they began to break branches from the palm trees to pave the path of the King who comes in the name of the Lord.

As in every truly joyful moment, there is a negative voice, here it is the Pharisees: “Master, rebuke Your disciples.” Jesus’ powerful response was: “I tell you that, if these should hold their peace, the stones would cry out.”

You might be interested to know that the Palms that the children carry in our worship on Palm Sunday were actually grown wild near Jerusalem. I order them each year and have them shipped to Huntsville for this service. Can you let your mind comprehend that the plants that we carry here on Palm Sunday could be the descendants of the palms used for the first Palm Sunday parade?

The Palm Sunday choral worship is also from this text. The choir becomes the joyful crowd following Jesus proclaiming the Master’s words: If we fail to praise You, Father, then will the very rocks cry out. Could it be that this same crowd was to gather a few days later and once again raise their voices? Could it be that the tongues that offered praise would then scream, “Let Him be crucified.” Humanity is fickle. God is not and that is a powerful message of Holy Week, which begins with Palm Sunday.

On Thursday, March 20 at 7:00 in the Sanctuary our Maundy Thursday service will be led as a service of Taize prayers and songs. The quiet contemplative and personal service can empower your walk with Jesus to the cross, the grave and the skies. I hope you will plan to attend.

Listening for the praises,
Handy
